Demographic and Health Surveys (DHS) are a series of population-based surveys that provide information on a wide range of demographic and health indicators. These surveys are conducted in many countries around the world, and they provide valuable data for researchers and policymakers. The DHS program is a joint effort of the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) and the Demographic and Health Surveys Program (DHS) of the United States Department of Health and Human Services. The program is designed to provide a comprehensive overview of the demographic and health status of a country, and to identify areas for improvement. The DHS program is a key source of data for many countries, and it is used by a wide range of organizations, including the United Nations, the World Bank, and the World Health Organization. The DHS program is a valuable tool for understanding the needs of a population, and for developing effective policies and programs to improve the health and well-being of a country.
